April 25, 2017
1:00 pm – 2:00 pm

Presenter:

Jackie Frail, R/TRO, Niagara College

Objectives:

1. By the end of this session, participants will be able to identify 2 pieces of evidence that support a strengths-based approach.
2. By the end of this session, participants will be able to distinguish the difference between internal and external strengths.
3. By the end of this session, participants will be able to identify one tool for assessing participant’s strengths.

Program Description:

Participants will have the opportunity to learn/review the strengths-based approach and discover how its application to TR practice is paramount. Within the session, the facilitator will review the literature that supports the use of a strength-based approach, discuss why strengths-based approaches lend themselves well to TR practice, define different types of strengths (internal vs. external) and present how leisure can be utilized as both an internal and external strength. The session will conclude with dialogue about practical ways to apply a strengths-based approach through TR assessment, planning, implementation and evaluation.
